The world of multimedia is fast-moving, with important legal implications for its originators, developers, producers, distributors, and consumers. How does one protect rights and privacy on the Information Superhighway? How does one create a Web site and what legal issues are involved? How does traditional law accommodate new products? Do established rules of law adapt to new media? Guest speakers share their knowledge and experience as actors or in representing clients navigating on the information superhighway in the publishing, software, communications, media, financial, and other industries. No prior legal background is necessary.
